

EDUSCRUM TRAINING

enabling students and teachers to work together in an energetic, effective and efficient way

With 1800 students aged 11-18, Ashram College looks like most other Dutch secondary schools. The exceptional part comes in the classes of Willy Wijnands. The desks are not set up in rows, they face each other. The students learn together in teams: eduScrum Teams.

'Scrum' derives from the 'Agile' framework originally created for software development projects. It quickly turned out that it suited the broader world of work. Scrum sees to it that people work together in a collaborative, productive and enjoyable way. eduScrum is Scrum tailored to the needs and objectives of education. Designed by Willy, it brings principles and energy of Scrum into the classroom.

The most exciting thing about eduScrum is that students take ownership of their own learning. Working with the content of any curriculum, they manage their own projects, their time involved and their learning process. eduScrum helps students to grow as a team as well as individuals, while at the same time create an enjoyable and stimulating atmosphere in the classroom. The teacher plays a vital and dynamic role in facilitating everything that happens.

At the end of the training participants will take away a certificate, a thorough understanding of the eduScrum framework and the tools to start their own eduScrum lessons.

WHO

This training is for teachers, and all who work in education in the widest sense.

You do not need any previous experience of Agile or Scrum.

The training is led by Willy Wijnands, the creator of eduScrum, in collaboration with Cambridge Leadership College, and Cambridge International School where eduScrum is used in the KS3 curriculum.
